

THE Big 3

EPISODE: 109

TITLE: How to Innovate Your Life With Lifelong Learning

Becoming or maintaining the posture of a “lifelong learner” definitely takes intentionality. But now you have a process for getting started and keeping this going year-to-year. The benefits to your marriage, ministry, family and overall character will be powerful and noticed by those around you.

1. Determine that you want to become or stay a life-long learner.

For your self; for those in your life you love or lead; and for the next generation that will follow you. Make a commitment to tell important people in your life of your decision and calendar some reading time into your week as a rhythm right now. Find an hour or two in the next 3-4 days (or today) to prioritize the areas of your life that you want to grow and learn in.

2. Glean the wisdom of others. Contact people you know from your church, work, friends, teachers or professors that you can spend time with to grow in areas that they are strong in. Get those meetings scheduled! Prepare questions you want to ask them in advance of your time together and take notes or record your sessions.

3. Make a list of books you plan to read in the upcoming 6-12 months. Remember, pick a killer book in EACH of your personal top categories each year and commit time to read each week. Get started on this one right away. You already have your calendar out? Great!
